

poetry by Carl Palmer

6

house call

in the small overheated room an elderly woman ingrained within her floral couch the odors of dying flowers in the silver vase reflect browns and yellows and greens and a blonde long since faded to gray